Why Language Should be Studied.

The study of philology, or of language by itself, is undoubtedly of great value; but it is rather a study for the specialist than for the average student. It is, certainly, a true science; only, lacking precision in its methods, and being deficient in practical applicability to the general affairs of life, it must be left out of account for the present. In a general course of study a language should be taught because of its value in opening up other departments of knowledge. It should reveal to us the thoughts of other peoples, and enable us to avail ourselves of their experience. For most men these purposes are best fulfilled by a study of the modern toogues. Latin and Greek are valuable, no doubt, only they are less indispensable than French and German. These newer languages are not only of practical value, being spoken and written by millions of our fellow-brings to-day, but they have also many direct bearings upon all modern life. The sciences can not be well shudted without them; they open up the widtest field of recent thought; they bring us lite. The sciences can not be well sindied without them; they open up the widest field of recent thought; they bring us into closer harmony with the spirit of our own times. We can get along better without a knowledge of antiquity than without a knowledge of the days in which we live. The history of the siege of Troy has less interest for us than the history of the great social and economic problems which are being worked out in such deadly earnest in our country and in Europe to day. The such a country and in Europe to-day. The ancient languages have their uses, unquestionably; so also have the Russians and the Chinese; but are those uses of sufficient importance to warrant universal study? Remembering the aims of education, we must also remember that every student has but a limited number of years to spend at college. In those few years he must acquire that learning which will best fit him to go forth and grapple with active duties. If he has both the taste and the leisure, then he can learn the dead languages after graduation. It is nothing to urge that Latin and Greek facilitate the acquisition of French and German, since the latter can be studied directly as well as the former. Few peo-ple can afford the time to study four languages in order to use but two.— From "The Higher Education," in Pop-ular Science Monthly for August.

How Mountains are Sawed in Two

How Mountains are Sawed in Two.

The contracting or shivering of the earth causes the rocks near the surface to wrinkle or fold, and such a fold was started athwart the course of the river. Had it been suddenly formed, it would have been an obstruction sufficient to turn the water in a new course to the east, beyond the extension of the wrintle; but the emergence of the fold above the general surface of the country was little or no faster than the progress of the corrasion of the channel. We may say, then, that the river did not out its way down through the mountains, from a height many thousand feet above its present site; but, having an slovation differing but little, parhaps, from what it now has, as the told was lifted, it cleared away the obstruction by cutting a canon and the walls were thus elevated on either side. The river preserved its level, but mountains were lifted up; as the saw revolves on a fixed pivot, while the log through which is cuts is moved along. The river was the saw which cut the mountains in two.—Popular Science Monthly for August.
